AREAS

There are several distinct areas in Orange County. The Costa Mesa freeway is a popular dividing line between the northern and the southern regions. The North OC was the first part of the county to be developed and is culturally closer to the neighboring Los Angeles County. The most prominent cities in North OC are Anaheim, Fullerton and Santa Ana. South Orange County on the other hand is more residential, elite, and more recently developed. Irvine, the largest city in the region, is an exception to some of these trends. South Orange County almost always includes Irvine, Newport Beach and Costa Mesa. There is also another (sub)region of Orange County, the Orange Coast with a string of cities and neighborhoods fronting the Pacific Coast. Cities associated with beach town flair and surf culture are Seal Beach, Huntington Beach, Newport Beach, Laguna Beach, Dana Point and San Clemente.

ANAHEIM

Anaheim is the heart of Orange County. With its laid-back atmosphere and unbeatable attractions, this vibrant city on the northwest side of the county has become a popular destination for visitors. Known for A-list, family-friendly attractions like Disneyland Park, Disney California Adventure Park, and Knott's Berry Farm, Anaheim offers more, from delicious cuisine at the Anaheim Packing House to an ice-cold beer at the Packard Building. Thanks to the revamping, the central shopping and dining area makes Anaheim an outstanding destination for everyone, from families to gourmands. In recent years, walkable, livable, sociable areas have sprouted around town, making the city a worthy magnet for locals and visitors alike.

SANTA ANA

The city of Santa Ana is the second-most populous city in Orange County and the county seat. There is a lot to offer here, from the historic downtown area to the many cultural sites and numerous green spaces. The original courthouse, The Old Orange County Courthouse, still stands. This historic landmark serves as a museum. Downtown Santa Ana hosts many community events including the farmers market, the Artwalk, and music nights. Also located in downtown Santa Ana is the Artist's Village – a flourishing art community with galleries, studios, creative small businesses, dining, and residential space.

AREAS

COSTA MESA

Costa Mesa, named The City of Arts, is one of the poshest areas in California's sun-drenched Orange County. "Costa Mesa" means "coastal tableland" as a reference to the city's geography as being on a plateau by the coast. With its southernmost border only one mile from the Pacific Ocean, Costa Mesa has evolved from a town with agricultural roots to becoming a world-class center for fashion with a venue like South Coast Plaza, a mecca for arts and theater with Segerstrom Center for the Arts, and a renowned dining destination. Costa Mesa is also home to the OC Fair & Event Center, which hosts the annual Orange County Fair, one of the largest in the country.

HUNTINGTON BEACH

Local waves make Huntington Beach a hub of surf activity. The city's moniker, Surf City USA, says it all. From surf wear shops and local wave-rider hangouts to suntanned surfers in search of that perfect wave, you can't help but dive into this beach town's infectious surf culture. Beachfront lounges, lively breweries, distilleries, and having cocktails on the sand make Huntington stand out as one of the best party spots in Orange County. While its bars are legendary, there is much more to do here than bar-hop.

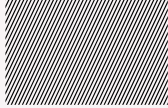

NEWPORT BEACH

Newport Beach is quirky and nuanced and much more than radiant sun, sand and surf. Newport Beach epitomizes the casual yet sophisticated lifestyle of Southern California. This idyllic destination is widely celebrated for its natural beauty which sets the scene for a vibrant yachting community alongside upscale accommodations, eclectic coastal cuisine and world-class shopping. This stretch of southern California has been home to artists, surfers, and the stars of Hollywood's Golden Age. Like any glamorous icon of a certain age, this coastal town has changed its identity a few times over the years. Notwithstanding, the city's heart and soul still revolve around the harbor, which comprises two bodies of water. There's Upper Newport Bay, an ecological reserve ringed by a 10-mile loop trail that attracts birders, joggers, equestrians, and cyclists. The four-mile-long Lower Newport Bay, meanwhile, features lovely shops and restaurants – especially in Cannery Village, Balboa Peninsula, and Balboa Island. The town also has a thriving surf scene, thanks to more than 8 miles of beaches and the bodysurfers' bucket-list spot known as the Wedge, with raucous waves that can easily reach 20 feet in height.

LAGUNA BEACH

In more than 10 years, Laguna Beach has become a household name, thanks largely to its presence on television. But for those who know it well, it's a quirky beach town marked by palm-tree studded streets, a string of art galleries, and big and small hotels sitting right on the bluffs. This seaside community was discovered by a group of landscape painters in the 1920s and quickly became a destination of choice for the artistically inclined. With posh hillside mansions, trendy shopping areas, and a rugged coastline of cliffs leading to secluded sandy beaches, it's a great place to discover hidden gems and relax in a low-key setting.

DANA POINT

Dana Point remains an overlooked treasure in Southern California. It is Southern California's original surf town, bringing together the best of luxury amenities and laid-back surf culture to create one idyllic destination. It's a place with sophistication and taste, and yet it's casual. Set between San Diego and Los Angeles, Dana Point offers everything from sunset wine cruises and luxury spas to surfing and ocean view golfing. Stand-up paddleboarding (SUP) and kayaking rentals, as well as "pirate ship" adventures, beach and aerial yoga classes, and deep sea fishing offer endless options for making memories.

Chicken and vegetarian items are on offer, but there's no denying that beef is king on this menu. The decor is bright, neat, and hip. A bar in the back pours craft mocktails that pair swimmingly with such memorable items as beef (sirloin) kebabs with mustard oil, yogurt, and garlic.
